

purpose of levelling the settlement, and houses of all sizes and shapes are being built right and left in all directions, without thought ever coming to the front. (Hear, hear.)

In the reports referred to, reproduced in the public press, some singularly strange assertions have been made, such as would only be possible for a person utterly unacquainted with the art of navigation to make.

In those reports the navigation of the coasts of Korea is represented as surrounded with much danger (great laughter); while we are aware that there are no more dangers connected with the navigation of the Korean coasts than with the seas of the neighbouring countries of China and Japan. (Hear, hear, and applause.) The weather in Korea is much the same as in China and Japan, with the sole distinction that its climate is much more healthy. The rivers along our coasts, and in our rivers, are less numerous than in China, less than in certain portions of the Japan Inland Sea, less than in the strait separating Yesso from Nippon, less than in the Kuro-siwo, which washes the southern and eastern portions of the Japanese Archipelago. Where then are the dangers of Korean navigation? (Laughter.) The high rise and fall of the tide in this port has been alluded to in the reports referred to, made by an unseamanlike official reporter.

There is about as much rise and fall in Liverpool as here, and a great deal more in Bristol, much more in many prosperous ports in Great Britain, France and America; and it is about time that the mind of the public should be disabused of the influence of such injudicious reports and non-sense (great applause)—the more so, as very unjustly these non-technical reports appear to have influenced, unjustly, the rate of insurance on shipping trading to Korea. (Hear, hear.) We have now the satisfaction of seeing already in this port every month about three steamers from Japan, at least one from China, six or seven Japanese sailing vessels of foreign type from Japan, some Japanese junks, and generally also one or more similar specimens of ante-diluvian naval architecture from China. (Hear, hear.) This is not bad for a new port, opened only some few months ago! (Applause.)

Gentlemen, I am in a position to give you a long list of imports and exports of this new port—but since you know them, no doubt, as well as myself, it would be writing on my part to now bore you with statistics. I only make this remark as a proof that, if the trade of this port increases as it has done thus far, then Jenchuan will be one of the leading ports of the so-called "Far East" before many years have passed over the land. (Cheers.)

The rapidly rising prosperity of this promising port, I consider, in no small measure, due to the wise action of the only Consul officer of high rank at present amongst us, conjointly with the liberal action of the Korean Government and local native officials, and in no small degree to the foreign Commissioner of the Royal Maritime Customs. (Hear, hear and prolonged applause.) I have now the honour, gentlemen, not only to propose to you to drink the prosperity of this rapidly rising port, but also to propose that ever will be connected prominently the name of our host, an early and successful pioneer (cheers), but also to the long health and happiness of Consul Kobayashi. (Renewed cheers.)

May he be spared to reach the highest degrees of his career, which is a long and honourable one, as he deserves. The health of the Consul was then drunk with great enthusiasm, with three ringing cheers; and the throng about the gentleman thus honoured was very great, everybody present being eager to shake hands with him. The toast was received with equal enthusiasm, and was coupled with the name of the intelligent foreign adviser of the Korean Government, His Excellency Paul von Mollerndorf, Vice-President of the Korean Foreign Office.

During the pleasant soiree, after the more formal official state dinner, animated song in all the languages of the East and West could be listened to, comme il faut, and the Consul, very ably assisted by his amiable Secretary, was indefatigable in attending personally to the numerous foreign and native guests, including, of course, the leading Japanese residents.—Mercury.

"BUSHED."

(Sydney Bulletin.)

Reader, have you ever been "bushed"? I mean, of course, "bushed" in the fullest sense of the word. Not merely "slewed" for an hour or so, but hopelessly, inextricably lost in the unexplained wilderness of an Australian desert? If you never happened to have had such an experience, pray hearken, whilst you read this grim remembrance of other days, that you never may be so situated.

Some years ago, a party of four, amongst whom was the writer of this sketch, took up country on the very edge of the then unknown land, supposed to be the "Great Desert of the Interior." We were young, full of hope and vigour, and meant in time to work a fortune out of those apparently boundless plains, over which roamed our all-in-the-shape-of-about-3,000-head-of-cattle-and-a-large-mob-of-horses. Ah me! When I look back upon those days of long ago, with the faded light of bitter memories, I wonder, with a vague kind of admiring wonder, at the glorious fund of belief and confidence in our selves we must have possessed, to have even dreamt of making money out of a desert of scrub grass—where there was any—and salt water, such as had been represented to us in the far away sale-rooms, as "some of the best" pastoral land in the colony, gentlemen, perfectly suitable for either cattle or sheep. But to my story, and a true to useless regrets.

At the head of a long sheet of brackish water, which ran up between two fantastically shaped rocks, we had built a house of stones, thatched with long reeds that grew in the lagoon; and, stirred partly by tender memories of vanished years, we solemnly named the site of our future head station, "Antony's Cove"; and although wanting were the tall red cliffs with their emerald crown, wanting the sequestered, shingly beach, where madrepores abounded, and from which the sound of the sea fell ever subdued and soft on the ear in the long summer days—still, though wanting every attribute of its far-away namesake, "The Cove," as we came to call it, possessed a weird Australian fascination of its own, which was fully appreciated by us in that charming land.

About the time my story opens, we had been searching unsuccessfully for some of our cattle strayed or driven away by the blacks, and on this particular evening, with the exception of one of our number still absent, sitting down to supper, I directed after a long day's bootless quest. Two stockmen, a blackboy, my two friends, myself, and missing James Elliot, constituted our little party, over 150 miles from the nearest station.

Supper was long over, and still no sign of the missing man. Fear was expressed that "Jim" was bushed properly this time. The night wore on, and in spite of volleys from rifles and revolvers, no answering shot or coo-coo could we hear. All these days we searched vainly for miles around in three parties, through the scorching heat, but found no trace.

At length I resolved, terrified and uneasy—for James Elliot was a good friend and staunch comrade—to make a great detour, on purpose to get right outside the numberless cattle and horse-tracks that had bothered us so all day, and, advising the others to do likewise, and promising to meet them at Oorabba Lagoon, I started off. Stockings off at a smart canter, determining to find some trace of my lost friend before returning.

I was a very fair bushman, and was in the habit of remarking that it was nearly impossible for a man to get thoroughly bushed provided that the sun was visible, and that he would not keep cool and not get "flushed." I was fated soon to find out all about that.

I had been riding smartly for, as near as I could judge, about three hours, and had long left the last cattle track far behind, when I at length turned my back on the setting sun, which looked like a ball of molten brass, and rode dispirited, and nearly hopeless for my friend, towards the Oorabba, the waterhole which I had appointed as rendezvous for the other searchers.

I spurred my weary horse towards the lagoon, hoping almost against hope to hear good news there of the lost one. The moon, now nearly at her full, shone calmly out, her pale beams lying caressingly on the landscape as if attempting to alleviate the effects of the parching heat of the terrible rays of the December sun.

So, on and on through the still night, stopping every now and then to empty my revolver, listening intently after every shot for a reply, and hearing but the harsh cry of some startled night bird. I thought, too, that I must surely be approaching Oorabba. The small water-bag I always carried at the saddle was empty, and thirst began to make itself felt.

Impatiently I struck into a canter, and soon had the satisfaction of seeing, as I supposed, the curious hill, or rather "tor," that marked the whereabouts of the lagoon. With a joyful shout I galloped up, and stood in amazement. The hill I could have sworn to, but lagoon, or sign of water, there was none. To add to my astonishment, away to the right stood similar curiously-shaped bare rocks, looking solemn and stately in the moonlight, but utterly strange to me.

After riding about for a little, I took the saddle off Stockings, and lay down for a while to think it over. But the more I thought—the more bothered I became; and, at length, hungry, thirsty, and weary as I was, fell off to sleep.

I woke up suddenly, with a scared kind of feeling, to find the hot sun shining full on my upturned face.

Jumping up, I soon discovered that Stockings had died during the night, and heartily cursed my stupidity for not hobnobbing him with the stirrup-leathers before I fell asleep so suddenly. But, after looking around a little, I could scarcely blame the old horse for absconding, although it might mean death to his master—for as far as the eye could reach grew not a blade of grass, only a kind of straggling, thorny, weed, that I never remembered to have seen before.

It was a blue look out, and I felt it to be so. Climbing with difficulty to the summit of one of the highest tor, composed of a brownish, brittle kind of sandstone, I gazed on a scene of barren desolation. Veritably I stood on "a great rock in a weary land," and the weariness stretched apparently without end, and on every hand.

At length, far away to the N.E., I thought I could discern a few straggling trees, and for these I determined to make. So, descending, I commenced my weary tramp, sinking up to the instep in some places in coarse sand and in others in soft suffocating wind blew up in clouds, adding to the torments I already endured from thirst and hunger, whilst the pitiless scorching sun seemed to eat with its withering heat into my very brain.

After tramping painfully for five or six miles, I was nearly dead-beat, and lay down with a groan of despair. I was literally gasping, and my breath as it came and went made a strange rattling noise in my throat, which felt swollen to four times its natural size, whilst I could feel my parched tongue rattling in my moistless mouth. I was bushed.

And so, getting up and staggering a few paces, only to fall again, till night once more came, and the unconcealed-looking placid moon again cast her beams around the miserable exhausted wanderer, driving me nearly frantic, with muttered curses and entreaties, I again feebly staggered on. I had a loaded revolver in the broad leathern belt around my waist, but such a thought as making use of the weapon to put an end to my misery and pain never came into my head for a moment.

Ah! it was horrid! and, even at this distance of time, a shudder runs through me as I write. Another day, and still feebly on, through a dead land where was no single living thing.

Of that last day and night I have only a dim, dream-like recollection of being possessed with but one overpowering, irresistible desire—the desire of getting along, along at any price, at all hazards; and of casting away, after every staggering, swooning fall, boots, hat and every article of clothing. Conscious only of a mad anger at the delay incurred by falling—reckless of feeling nothing of the cuts, scratches, and bruises I received thereby. Till at length, stretched out before me, glimmering silverly white in the moonlight, lay water.

Water, long and clear, with sedgy banks, upon which grew a few stunted trees.

Naked and bleeding, I crawled towards it, and lying flat on the ground—for I was aware, even at that supreme moment, of a vague feeling of shame—I prevented me from rushing bodily into it as was my first impulse, I approached my lips to the surface, when—O God!—out of those glassy depths stared, full into mine a well-known, well-loved face, pale, emaciated, with wide open eyes and fallen jaw. Naked and white he lay, the long brown hair straggling gently to and fro, as a light, night breeze ruffled the still water.

I had found him at last, but 'twas a ghastly meeting! Tossing to my feet with what was meant for a shriek of horror, and sounded simply as the unearthly gibber of a dumb man, I fell back senseless on the sedgy banks of that dread water.

It was many a long day after that I recovered my senses to find myself, or rather a shadow of myself, an inmate in the fever ward of R-n Hospital, and could bear to be told how they had found me, wandering naked and feeble in and out of the great salt lagoons, a raving madman, but never desisting from muttering, raving, and gibbering at an awful "something" that laid claim to the heart. For, of the rest, one lies in the churchyard of a quiet little French village, shot through the heart by a Russian bullet, the other, under a woman's grave when the Cypripedium flung her burning timbers seaward the ocean.

"The Cove" is now part of a "territory" recently acquired by, perhaps, the most powerful pastoral company in Australia. May they have better luck with their venture than we had with ours!

Denpigh, N.S.W.

THE LIME-KILN CLUB.

"Who am de doctah?" asked Brother Gardner, as Samuel Shin finally got room for his feet and the meeting came to a close.

"In de first place he am a young man who 'tars up sidewalks, lugs off gates, takes up seats in de street kyar, walks six abreast on de sidewalks, cultivates slang an' am 'only two pints removed from a loafer. He graduates. He has larned some Latin, some surgery, and what he doan know 'bout medicine he ain't wint to practice on. By an' by you 'lar of him as a successful doctah. He has stuck his stakes an' drawn his lines. He has larned dat castor ole an' a gentle cathartic; an' he will proceed from dat to figger what may be good for typoids."

"De doctah am a man who pucks his mouf an' shakes his head. He am werry careful not to talk too high. If one of his patients foun' dat aqua pura meant water de doctah would consider de case hopeless. What he lacks in knowledge he reckons de family will make up in good nussin'."

"De doctah am a wise man. If he finds de pulse up an' de tongue coated he knows dar am a fever. If it shouldn't happen to be fever de medicine would do just de same good. When he can't tell a case of measles from a case of small-pox he kills two birds wid one stone by prescribing family doctah should set down an' tell a patient dat he had bilious fun, an' dat he was givin' him sartin remedies an' dat he would be out in twelve or fourteen days, de patient would ex, ex inside of two hours. De only safe way am to shake de head, scare de wife inter fix, an' pronounce it a case of life an' death whar de chillen mus' be spanked and tied up, de doah-bell muffled, an' all de relashuns telegraphed to. It's only arter de patient am seen sawin' wood de week arter dat he am told what a clus' shave he had."

"De doctah am a man who sticks. When he gits hold of a case dar am no let-go unless he gits pulled off. If he can't cure he kin advise a trip to Maninaw or Florida, an' if de patient am on cival half to die on his hands, de doctahs am ready to testify dat his life was pre-saved a hull y'r longer dan could have bin expected. De doctah who could admit dat a case was too complicated for him would be hustled out of de ring in de time."

"De doctah am a great stickler fur de 'professional.' It ain't professional to advertise dat he am a doctah. De public mus' take him for a bank robber or a boss-jockey an' keep up de inquiry until it am disklivered dat he am a doctah. It ain't professional fur two doctahs to meet ober de same patient, fur fear he will gits well. It ain't professional for one doctah to admit dat another has written morphine whar he meant quinine an' killed somebody. Eben when a coroner's jury am sittin' on de body of a butchered woman it ain't professional fur a doctah to call it a case of abortion. It mus' be his opinyun dat de woman was run-ober by a train of kyars. Nobody ober h' ara of a doctah makin' mistakes. De undertaker kivers 'em up an' de fraternity take de witness stand. Let us now proceed to business."

Sir Isaac Walpole was about to remark that he would give more for a motherly old woman, a large mustard plaster and a quart of sage tea than for the best doctor in the State when a section of plaster fell upon his head and occasioned several minutes of personal embarrassment. When he had got the lime out of his eyes he passed the bean-box and announced the election of the following candidates:—Moses Shaker, Uncle Reuben Smith, Prof. Gilmaater, Judge Parker, Elder Dawson, Peter Cooper White, Darius Jones, Evergreen Taylor and John St. John—the last-named being a self-educated art critic, capable of criticising a view in the Yosemite and a portrait of George III. at the same time.

FALL RATES. Col. Contraband Smith, Chairman of the Committee on Decorative Art, announced a new scale of prices to be adopted for the fall and winter season, and after some debate they were accepted. "The increase over summer rates is about ten per cent. Stove pipe will be blacked and put on at the rate of $24 per mile with extra force boys. Wood sawing will remain at the same figures, whether the sawyer is asked to eat dinner with the family or not."

A COLLECTION. Waydown Beech asked the privilege of reading the following newspaper paragraph from the St. Thomas Journal in a pathetic voice:—"We understand that Moses Clark, a knight of the razor, doing business in this city, but now rusticated in Michigan, was robbed of $1305 on a ferry boat one day last week. Mr. Clark was eating watermelon at the time, and the thief took advantage of Clark while he was taking a bite and went through his pockets."

"Am dat de pussorin de aunty-room?" asked the President.

"I doan go much on a man whose mouf am so much bigger'n his pocket," a collection-shill will be broken up fur his benefit. Pickles Smith passed the hat, and the sum of thirteen cents was speedily realized. This was carried out to the victim and he was advised to take a palace car and bring up in his own town before some one stole his boots."

HE WILL. The Secretary then announced a letter from George Washington Wallace, of Lenawee County, inviting Brother Gardner to visit the county fair at Adrian, and requesting him to act as one of the judges in class "J," which is devoted to "postures and wood-chicks." The President replied that he would be most happy to accept the invitation, and would perhaps consent to deliver a speech on agriculture at the opera house on the second evening of the fair.

"NO SONSORS." An official communication from the Secretary of the Frog Eye Debating Society of Buckingham Co. Va., asked that the society be taken into the Lime-Kiln Club as a body. "The policy of the society had been:—1. To get all you can. 2. To keep all you get."

In politics it was neutral—in religion independent—in foreign affairs nowise interested. It had lost nearly half its membership by the measles within a year past, was in debt for rent, and its President would not be out of jail for over forty days yet.

The President remarked that the platform and policy of the club was too sonorous for him, and that nothing further would be done until the Secretary had time for correspondence.

Did I understand de Chay to say sonorous? asked the Rev. Penstock, as he suddenly rose up.

"You did, sah!"

"When de Chay made use of de term sonorous he didn't mean synonymous, did he?"

"No, sah."

"Ah—um! Does de Chay—?"

"Set down!" exclaimed the President, as he brought his gavel down with a crash. "When de Chay makes use of de word 'sonorous' he don't mean synonymous, or obnoxious! When he don't handle de English language he will call in help! Brudder Penstock, you has once bin fined $2500 for interruptin' de meeting! Be a little careful, how you further debilitate! Let us now uproot de water pall, turn down de lamps and depart to our domiciles!"—Diabolical Firm.

UNDER the heading "Exhibits to the Cork Exhibition, Ireland," "THE CORK
CONSTITUTION, No. 13,025, dated Saturday, July 14th 1883, says:—

MESSRS. TURNBULL JUNR. & SOMERVILLE,

"Valletta, Malta, exhibit in a tastefully arranged case, samples of their famous 'Kaisar-
I-Hind' Cigarettes, and inasmuch as a revolution in the habit of smoking is now setting in, this exhibit should prove attractive to all lovers of the 'fragrant weed.' Instead of strong Tobacco, often used in too strong pipes and full flavoured Cigars, the mild Cigarette is rapidly coming into vogue. Those now on view in the Exhibition are highly spoken of by the Press, vendors, and smokers."
